Dear Douglas,

Many thanks for your recent letter with the page of corrections enclosed.

I rather think that you conveyed the details to Miss Downie of Fabers direct. At all events I completed correction of the page proofs some time ago and the book should be published in June or early July.

I am most grateful to you for taking so much trouble on my behalf and I am most ashamed not to have sent you the enclosed Book Token at a much earlier date. Please accept it with my best thanks which I have, by the way, acknowledged in the Preface.

Thank you also for your paper on apothecaries of Oxford which I found most interesting.

Please convey my kindest regards to your with and with every good wish and kindest regards to yourself also.

Yours sincerely,

Douglas

PREFACE

I HAVE long been aware of the great value to medical historians throughout the English speaking world of the books commonly referred to as "Peterkin's Roll" and "Johnston's Roll". These two volumes, of which only limited editions were published, give biographical details of officers of the Army Medical Service for the periods 1660-1727 and 1727-1898 respectively. They have both been unobtainable for many years and it gives me great pleasure to record that the Wellcome Trust has made arrangements to republish them both in a single volume. I am also indebted to the Aberdeen University Press, the original publisher, for granting permission for their reprinting.

The biographical details of "Johnston's Roll" ended with the last officer to join the Army Medical Service before the formation of the Royal Army Medical Corps on 23 June 1898. There was clearly a need for a new roll from that date onwards, and the second volume, 1898-1960, completes a period of three hundred years from 1660. The foundations of such a work had already been laid due to the untiring efforts of the late Lieutenant-Colonel J. G. Foster, O.B.E., M.B.

I am particularly indebted to two members of my staff for the parts they have played in the production of this volume. The late Colonel A. D. Young, D.S.O., M.B., late R.A.M.C., wrote the Introduction, which is based largely on conditions of service throughout the period, and Major L. C. W. Baker, R.A.M.C., has had the most onerous task of preparing the biographical details.

Our efforts would, however, have come to nothing without the generous help of the Wellcome Trust which has undertaken the publication and whose staff, throughout the period of production, have been so understanding and so helpful. My present thanks to the Trust will surely be echoed by medical historians in future years.

INTRODUCTION

"Army doctors are members of two professions, and unless they have mastered them both they fail in their duty. They must be soldiers knowing something of the structure of armies and of their ways in peace and war; lacking that essential knowledge they cannot give their full service in keeping troops healthy at all times and in saving life under fire."

("The Times"—10th August, 1951)

THE aim of this volume is to record biographical details of all permanent Regular officers who were commissioned in the Royal Army Medical Corps between 23 June 1898, the date of its formation, and the year 1960. It is thus a continuation of the two volumes commonly known as "Peterkin's Roll" and "Johnston's Roll" and, with them, provides an unbroken record for 300 years.

As far as possible the format of "Johnston's Roll" has been followed, but it has been possible, certainly since the 1914-18 War period, to give more details about specific appointments, particularly with regard to specialist officers. This, in itself, illustrates one of the advances made during the period under review.

The criterion for inclusion in "Johnston's Roll" was service on full pay. Such a principle could not be followed in the present work because of the huge numbers involved, and the decision was made to include only officers who held permanent Regular commissions. There is thus no mention of many officers who served with distinction during the major wars of the period or of the peacetime officers, from 1934 onwards, who held Short Service commissions.

This criterion has also affected the inclusion of many non-medical officers. Before the 1939-45 War the only non-medical officers in the R.A.M.C. were 52 Regular quartermasters employed solely on quartermaster duties. During that war it became necessary to employ non-medical officers in a wide variety of administrative appointments previously held by medical officers. Direct emergency commissions as non-medical officers were introduced in 1942. After the War, in 1946, a Short Service commission for administration and technical officers was introduced. In 1954 there was a reversion to one class of non-medical officers only, and officers in it were on quartermaster rates of pay, although used for both quartermaster and administrative duties. In 1963 the non-medical officer cadre was re-organised into Quartermasters, Administrative Officers, and Technical Officers, the latter including specially selected state registered nurses and mental nurses, radiographers, laboratory technicians, public health inspectors, and dispensers/technical storemen. As many of the administrative officers only held Limited Service commissions, and the technical officers all had Short Service commissions, these officers are not included in this book.

In addition, as the Regimental System, i.e. the system in which doctors belonged to the regiment in which they served, had only been abolished 25 years before the last entries in "Johnston's Roll", the close association of doctors and combatant units was a noted feature of that work. In order to show that, although the system has changed, the association still exists, every effort has been made in the present volume to record appointments as Regimental Medical Officers. This has, however, only been done where an officer has clearly been on the posted strength of a regiment or battalion for a reasonable period of time, usually not less than 9 months.

Finally, as the present volume only treats of permanent Regular officers, this introduction is concerned with their conditions of service. No attempt is made to deal with the part played by the Corps in the major and minor wars which occurred during the period. For such historical details the reader is referred to the official medical histories of the 1914-18 and 1939-45 Wars, as well as to Colonel Fred Smith's "A Short History of the Royal Army Medical Corps", and to Mr. Peter Lovegrove's "Not Least in the Crusade".

Factors Leading to the Formation of the Royal Army Medical Corps

In order to understand the development of the Corps it is necessary to appreciate the factors which led to its creation, and it would be wrong merely to assume that the Army Medical Service before 1898 was unsatisfactory. It had not always been so, and it was not until the Crimean War, 1854-56, that grave deficiencies began to become apparent in it. In spite of a public outcry at that time the Medical Service scarcely improved and there followed a series of inquiries into its defects: Lord Herbert of Lea's Commission in 1858, Sir Ralph Thompson's Committee in 1878, Lord Morley's Committee in 1883, and Lord Camperdown's Committee in 1889. The key to the problem was the status of medical officers: to improve this meant overcoming considerable prejudice within the Army, and this, in turn, took many years.

The status of medical officers embraced many matters. From the point of view of rank they were not treated as the equals of other Army officers. They had, for a time, what was known as "relative rank", but even this was abolished in 1887. They had little control over medical matters affecting the Army or over the routine administration of their own affairs. Finally, and this rankled considerably, they were all too often treated as the social inferiors of other officers. The plight of the Army doctor was frequently the subject of bitter and satirical cartoons and articles in "Punch". It is all but unbelievable to read in an 1866 issue, under the heading—"Sad Want of Surgeons in the Army"—of the indignities Army doctors might be expected to suffer. After alluding to cleaning boots and sitting at side tables in Mess, the article goes on: "It will be requisite for them [i.e. surgeons] to acquiesce in the Regulations which denies those of them who chance to die the usual military honours at their interment. For further particulars enquire at The Tatters and Starvation Club, The Horse Guards."

Parliamentary Reports in the years immediately prior to the formation of the Corps give a clear picture of the unsatisfactory position of doctors in the Army, and of the valiant efforts of medical members of Parliament, and later of the British Medical Association, to right it. In 1883 attention was drawn to Lord Wolseley's neglect to inform the Medical Service of his operational intentions in the Egyptian campaign and the inevitable result of such an omission. In 1884 the doctor-patient relationship was touched upon with reference to the abolition of the Regimental System in 1873: "The women of the Regiment do not think that the present system is anything to compare with the old one: they look at the doctor now as their enemy, not as their friend. In olden times he was quite their friend."

There was frequent reference to rank in 1887. The Secretary of State for War said: "I have no reason to suppose that these officers [i.e. medical] are desirous of being called by titles so dissociated from the duties of their honourable profession as those of Colonel, Major and Captain." The supply of candidates for the Army Medical Service was said to have almost ceased about 1870 because of "the refusal to recognise medical men in the Army as on an equality with combatant and other officers", and, again, "The medical officers feel that they are not treated with respect to rank and position."

In 1888, following upon the British Medical Association's analysis of the opinions of some 1,200 medical officers in the Royal Navy and the Army, the Secretary of State was asked what action he proposed to take. His reply was: "These opinions must have been obtained and expressed in a manner altogether in contravention of military discipline. Medical officers, like other officers, have a proper channel through which they can be heard, and I am not prepared to accept any Civilian Association as their mouthpiece."

In 1893 there was reference to the inadequate training of Army surgeons to enable them to carry out their duties to the sick and wounded in the field. There was also a complaint that medical officers did not receive the necessary assistance and protection in peacetime in carrying out their sanitary duties towards the rank and file of the Army. Questions were asked, too, about the availability of field hospital equipment for training and, rather strangely and prematurely, there is reference to 14 days' training in "field ambulance" work.

A new subject was raised in 1897, and this was the need for study leave, as well as a plea that medical officers might continue to serve beyond the age of 45 years.

Finally, at least in the context of Parliamentary Reports, all the problems of the Army Medical Service were reviewed in the debate on Army Estimates on 25 March 1898, and on 12 May of the same year it was announced: "The Royal Warrant relating to the Army Medical Service will be issued as soon as certain minor details which involve India can be settled. It will provide for the creation of a Royal Army Medical Corps, the members of which, up to the rank of colonel, will bear military titles. Above the rank of colonel the members of the Corps will bear the titles of surgeon-general, with the precedence and privileges of major-generals of the Army such as they now enjoy."

It is now necessary to consider the very important report of a British Medical Association Sub-Committee appointed to examine the question of advancing Army Medical Reform and which is dated 11 May 1897. After examining the available evidence, which included the findings of the various Committees referred to earlier, the strong impression felt by the Sub-Committee was: "The apparent indifference manifested through a long series of years by the War Office, not merely to the claims of admitted justice, but even to the serious necessities of the Medical Service." The Sub-Committee then set out to examine the conditions essential for the success of any establishment and how the Army Medical Service satisfied these conditions. The examination was conducted under four headings:

- (1) The establishment must be sufficient.
- (2) The individual standard must be sufficiently high.
- (3) The organisation and working must be as perfect as possible.
- (4) The conditions of service must be such as at least to preclude serious discontent.

Its general conclusions were: "We have thus considered how the Army Medical Service satisfies the four essential conditions we laid down at the offset. It satisfies none of them. In other words, it is at present in the most unsatisfactory possible condition. Justly discontented, with duties and responsibilities second to none in importance, but without the Army status necessary for their proper fulfilment, exposed to hardships and dangers in excess of those in any branch of the Army, yet without the military recognition which others receive; with an undue amount of foreign service, with no opportunity of advancing their professional knowledge, or the slightest encouragement to do so; with an anomalous and disjointed organisation between men and officers, and in face of indefinite postponement of reform, it is no wonder that the British Army Medical Service is on its way to extinction. It is impossible for anyone acquainted with this state of things to regard with equanimity the prospects of a great war. If such a calamity were to overtake us, it is difficult to see how we could avoid the utter collapse of the medical arrangements. A spectacle of misery and mortality to equal which we must look back to the horrors of the Crimea would not be a matter for astonishment."

The Sub-Committee then went on to consider the necessary reforms: "The reforms which seem to be required to restore contentment within the Army Medical Service, and confidence in it in the outside medical profession, are these:

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

- (a) The grant of Army Rank and Military Titles in a consolidated Army Medical Corps. This is by far the most pressing point.
- (b) Certain administrative reforms namely:
 - (1) Fair amount of study leave.
 - (2) Study leave carried out.
 - (3) Recognition and rewards for professional merit.
 - (4) Reconsideration of the possibility of connecting medical officers with regiments for a term of years."

The next step taken by the British Medical Association was to arrange for a deputation to be received by the Secretary of State for War. This took place on 20 January 1898, when Lord Lansdowne received the deputation at Lansdowne House. The deputation included representatives from most of the chief centres of medical education in the British Isles. The first Army doctor to be awarded the Victoria Cross, Surgeon-General Sir James Mouat, was one of the members of this deputation. This meeting, which was reported in the "British Medical Journal", and at which the various grievances and their remedies were put forward, ended on the tacit understanding that if questions of corps and rank were satisfactorily agreed to, the medical profession would see to it that the Army got the right type of young doctor.

Speaking at the Lord Mayor's Banquet, on 4 May 1898, Lord Lansdowne said there was no department in the public service which owed more to, or depended more upon, the medical profession than the Army. Medical officers were soldiers in the fullest sense of the word, taking their share—and more than that share—of the risk and hardship of warfare. On that account the Government was prepared to treat them with the respect to which they were entitled. The first necessity in a man who adopted the military profession was to have the military stamp which distinguished him and secured a proper place for him among his comrades. Her Majesty had been pleased to signify her intention of bestowing the title "Royal" upon the new Army Medical Corps. In that Corps medical officers would bear the same military titles as other Army officers up to that of Colonel. The title of Surgeon-General would be retained as it was intended to reduce the number of general officers in all corps, and no man was to bear the title who was not fit to take command in the field.

Early Years of the Royal Army Medical Corps

The long struggle by medical members of Parliament and by the British Medical Association had at last come to a successful conclusion. The Royal Army Medical Corps now consisted, like any other corps in the Army, of officers and men all wearing the same cap badges. With the new privileges came new responsibilities of command and administration, and it remained to be seen if this was the "as perfect as possible" organisation envisaged by the British Medical Association. So far, it might be added, there had been no mention of the remuneration of medical officers, or what was closely linked with this, their promotion prospects.

It was also not possible to sweep away all prejudice in Parliament and within the Army merely by the publication of a Royal Warrant. A hint of continuing problems was evident at a complimentary dinner given to Surgeon-General J. Jameson, Late Director-General Army Medical Services, by the medical profession of Great Britain and Ireland on 24 July 1901. In the course of his speech, and referring to the South African War, Surgeon-General Jameson said: "It will be seen that our difficulties were at first chiefly due to the deficiency of men of our own Corps, and the question arose, who was responsible?" The answer is to be found in the Report of the Royal Commission appointed to consider and report upon the care and treatment of the sick and wounded in the South African Campaign, in these words: "The deficiency was not the fault of the Director-General and the staff of officers associated with him. They had for a considerable time before the outbreak urged upon the military authorities the necessity for an increase of the Corps, but for the most part without avail."

Later on in his speech he said: "But the Medical Department is looked upon as a kind of excrescence of the War Office. It is not upon the same equality as that of the Royal Engineers, for example. The Director-General, unlike the Inspector-General of Fortifications, is not a member of the War Office Council, presided over by the Secretary of State, or of the Army Board, presided over by the Commander-in-Chief. He attends their meetings when summoned, but subjects concerning his department may be discussed in his absence, and as has sometimes happened, he may get a knowledge of their decisions after some delay. There are few subjects, I imagine, discussed, in which the health or comfort of the soldier is not directly or indirectly concerned, and when one considers that in war disease is always more fatal than gunshot, and that a tenth of the Army is every day under the command of the Medical Department, the wisdom of the Director-General's exclusion from these Boards is not apparent."

At the conclusion of the dinner, Sir William MacCormack, President of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, said, "It was impossible to say too much in the way of admiration of how Surgeon-General Jameson had met every requirement that had been made upon him, and it seemed to him passing strange that the Government had allowed that man to leave the ranks of the Army, not only without the customary recognition given to everyone of his predecessors, but also without one word of thanks or one line of acknowledgment."

In 1909 Sir Alfred Keogh, the Director-General, had some pertinent remarks to make on the Corps formed only 11 years previously. In a speech to officers he said: "The Medical Corps exists for war, and from the outset we laid ourselves out to improve the purely professional work of the Corps, its medicine, its surgery, its research, and its higher education; and since these things have now been accomplished, and are plain to the world, and are every day becoming plainer, we have arrived at the time when the adaptability of the Medical Corps for war must claim our whole attention. Recent changes in the Army, a better system of training, and a higher conception of the functions of a medical corps point the way. Two facts alone indicate the necessity for the art of war claiming our special attention. We have had lately created by Mr. Haldane a General Staff consisting of a highly intellectual body of staff officers, whose duty it is to study all the organisations for war, at home and abroad, and who have specially paid considerable attention to the relation of a medical service to an army in the field. These officers are studying your problems. See that you study them, too. It has been said that there is no literature in our language bearing upon these matters. Gentlemen, whose fault is this? Who could have written this literature for the officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps? Why has it not been written? Why have you and I and all of us been found wanting in this particular? Let us not look backwards, but let us look forward and see that in the future the Medical Corps of the Army recognises their importance, lay themselves out for the study of their problems, and in a word become what they really are—soldiers."

After referring to the creation of the medical service of the Territorial Force he went on to say: "However important the purely professional matters with which we may have to deal may be, remember that sanitation and administration are the most important of all. Much is being done, much has been done to develop this side of our work, but much remains to be done, and it is this fact which constitutes the defect in the existing Medical Corps of which I have spoken. Diminution in the cost of sickness, diminution in hospital admissions, diminution of invalidings and the study of the art of war are the problems of the future. Upon these matters depend your reputation and your glory. What you have done is appreciated, but what you can do is far beyond anything that has been done."

It should be added that Surgeon-General Keogh gave his name to a committee which had examined the requirements for, and the organisation of, medical units in the field and that the major units he created still exist in the Army today and, in spite of many modifications to meet varying circumstances, remain the same in principle. Looking back on all the facets of his work it is more than a temptation to say, "Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose". It is small wonder that he was called back from retirement in 1914 to undertake a second tour as Director-General.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

It is now appropriate to consider another important influence on the Army Medical Services: The Army Medical Advisory Board. It was constituted in 1907 and carried on the work previously undertaken by a variety of committees. These started with the Barrack and Hospital Improvement Commission in 1857, whose title was changed to the Army Sanitary Committee in 1867. Miss Florence Nightingale was closely associated with this body throughout its history. It was succeeded in 1902 by the Advisory Board for Army Medical Services. The Chairman was the Director-General, with the Deputy Director-General as Vice-Chairman. The members were two officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps, one being an expert in Sanitation and the other an expert in Tropical Diseases, five eminent members of the civilian profession in Great Britain and Ireland, a representative from the Quartermaster General's branch of the War Office, a representative of the India Office, and the Matron-in-Chief Queen Alexandra's Imperial Military Nursing Service. The civilian members were subsequently reduced from five to four.

The Board was set up on the recommendation of a Committee appointed by the Secretary of State to consider the re-organisation of the Army Medical Services. Reference to the paragraphs of this Report submitted by the Committee reveals the wide duties of the Board:

- “1. The Royal Army Medical Corps shall be under the supervision of a Board and be termed The Advisory Board for Army Medical Services.
2. To be appointed to the Board a Civilian Physician or Surgeon must hold, or have held, a post in a leading Civilian Hospital and be not more than 55 years of age on appointment.
3. Tenure of appointment for a Civilian Physician or Surgeon to be 3 years renewable upon expiration of tenure. Appointment to be vacated at 60 years. Honorarium of £200 per annum in addition to out-of-pocket expenses beyond a 4-mile radius of Charing Cross.
4. The Board to meet at fortnightly intervals.
5. The Board to report to the Secretary of State upon all matters concerned with medicine, surgery, sanitation, and epidemic diseases as they affect the military services.
6. The Board to advise the Secretary of State upon the adequate provision of hospitals, upon the supply of drugs, appliances, diets and medical comforts of the patients, and generally upon what concerned the well-being of the sick and wounded.
7. The Board to prepare and submit to the Secretary of State a scheme for the expansion of the Service to meet the needs of war and serious epidemics, transport, equipment of medical units, employment of civilian doctors, nurses, etc.
8. The Board to receive all plans for new hospitals and plans for barracks and standing camps and to report upon them to the Secretary of State.
9. The Board to prepare a list of civil hospitals recognised as places of study for members of the Royal Army Medical Corps.
10. The Board to prepare a list of hospitals and nurse training schools recognised for the purposes of the Queen Alexandra's Imperial Military Nursing Service.
11. The Board to arrange for an annual inspection of each of the military hospitals by a Sub-Committee of at least one military and one civilian member, the inspection to be made without notice.
12. The Sub-Committee (para. 11) to ascertain and report to the Board on the treatment of patients and on equipment in hospitals.
13. The Board to detail, with the permission of the Secretary of State, specially qualified officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps or others to visit and report upon army medical services of foreign countries.
14. The Board to consider promotion of officers or their retention in the Service.
15. The Board to supervise the admission of candidates to the Royal Army Medical Corps and to arrange for the examination of officers for promotion.
16. The Board to exercise a general control over the nursing service and, with the Nursing Board, to submit to the Secretary of State a scheme to develop the training of soldiers as attendants upon the sick and wounded."

In 1903 the Army Hospital Committee was formed to take over from the Advisory Board the duty of advising the Secretary of State on the equipment and provision of hospitals. Finally, the Army Medical Advisory Board was formed in 1907 in the place of the Advisory Board for Army Medical Services and the Army Sanitary and the Army Hospital Committees. The composition of the new Board was similar to the 1902 Board except that the Matron-in-Chief was no longer a member and an officer on the Director-General's staff was appointed Secretary. Its duties were also similar. It was to meet at fortnightly intervals but there was no longer an honorarium for civilian members. It was required to advise on:

1. Medicine, surgery, sanitation, and epidemic disease.
2. Matters of hygiene and sanitation affecting the soldier.
3. Sites and plans for barracks and hospitals.
4. Provision of hospitals and their equipment.
5. Civil hospitals recognised for study for members of the Royal Army Medical Corps.
6. Admission of candidates to the Corps and entrance and promotion examinations.
7. The carrying out of scientific investigations.
8. The appointment of professors and teachers at the Royal Army Medical College.

It is likely that the Board lapsed due to the 1914-18 War for nothing more is known of its activities until it was reconstituted in 1928. Its composition then was a President, the Director-General, four civilian members appointed by the Secretary of State, one of these being nominated chairman by him, the President of the Medical Board, India Office (ex officio), when matters concerning India were under discussion, and the Deputy Assistant Director-General of AMD 1 (Personnel Branch) as Secretary. Its terms of reference were simply: "To advise the Secretary of State on any question of policy, in connection with the Army Medical Services, on which he may desire to consult them." The Board was to meet three times a year and its proceedings were to be reported to the Secretary of State through the Director-General.

The only conclusion to be reached regarding the very different terms of reference of the old and new Boards is that the Corps now possessed the necessary knowledge and machinery for managing its own affairs.

Prior to 1904 the Army was administered jointly by the Commander-in-Chief, the Army Board and the War Office Council, the Director-General Army Medical Services being a member of the latter. This system was abolished by Lord Esher's Committee, which was set up to investigate and report upon the organisation of the War Office and the administration of the Army. A new Army Council was formed but the Director-General was not a member of it. That he should have been was strongly contended by the British Medical Association, not only at the time but for many years to come. The Army Medical Department disappeared as an independent department of the War Office and in its place was created the Army Medical Directorate as part of the Adjutant-General's Department.

In 1905 after the Manchurian Campaign, a medical officer was appointed to a medical section of the Directorate of Military Operations, and in 1907 the post of Inspector of Medical Services on the staff of the Inspector-General of the Forces was created. He had to confine his reports to the efficiency and training of the medical services for war. He was transferred in 1909 to the Department of the Adjutant-General and submitted his reports to him and not to the Director-General. In 1908 a medical officer on the retired list was attached to the Directorate of Military Training, his special concern being the training of the Royal Army Medical Corps section of the Officers' Training Corps.

During the 1914-18 War the Army Medical Directorate expanded and its organisation was modified to meet the changing situation. In 1918 it consisted of four branches: the first dealt with personnel of the medical services, their recruitment, training and posting, with the mobilisation of medical units and their preparation for active service; the second dealt with the medical and surgical treatment of the sick and wounded, with hospital organisation and accommodation, with statistics, and with hygiene and sanitation; the third was responsible for all questions of medical supplies and for medical boards; and the fourth administered the nursing service. The title of Surgeon-General was abolished in favour of Lieutenant-General and Major-General in 1918. In 1903 the Army Medical School moved from Netley to London where it re-opened as the Royal Army Medical College. It moved to its present location on Millbank in 1907.

The Period Between the Two World Wars

At the end of the 1914-18 War the organisation of the Army Medical Directorate was reviewed and certain important alterations and additions were made to it. In June 1919 Directorates of Hygiene and Pathology were established. At the head of these Directorates were the Directors of Hygiene and Pathology, and the appointments were reflected in Commands and Districts, as Deputy Directors and Deputy Assistant Directors. The four branches of the Army Medical Directorate were thus increased to six. In 1922 the Directorate was reinforced by the appointments of a Consulting Physician to the Army and a Consulting Surgeon to the Army, and these continued to be whole-time War Office appointments for the next 10 years. In 1932 further alterations were made which affected both the Directorate staff and the staff of the Royal Army Medical College. The Director of Pathology and the Consulting Physician and Consulting Surgeon were transferred from the Directorate to the College, where their appointments were merged into and combined with those of the professors of pathology, tropical medicine, and surgery, respectively. The abolition of the Directorate of Pathology coincided with these changes. At the same time the rank of the Commandant of the College was raised to Major-General and the appointment of the Deputy Director-General, previously a Major-General, was reduced to Colonel. In 1936 a directorate of Dental Services was established and the first Director of Army Dental Services appointed.

In 1922 the Army School of Hygiene was established in Aldershot, as a result of the foresight of General Keogh. Its function was to provide practical instruction in preventive medicine for the Army as a whole and not just for the Corps. It was formed by combining the Hygiene School at Blackpool, the Entomological Laboratory at Sandwich, and the Hygiene Laboratory at Aldershot. It was originally sited in a hutted camp at Puckeridge Hill, Aldershot, and moved, shortly after the outbreak of the 1939-45 War, to its present location in Keogh Barracks, Ash Vale.

The importance of specialist medical officers had been a feature of the 1914-18 War, but the majority of them were civilians holding temporary commissions. At the end of the war the Corps had few experienced surgeons and it was clear in this, and other specialties, that such training must be given to Regular officers in peacetime. With this in mind the senior, or promotion, course based on the Royal Army Medical College was introduced. The standards aimed at were membership of the Royal College of Physicians and Fellowship of the Royal College of Surgeons. The standard qualification for specialist hygiene officers was the Diploma in Public Health. Instruction was also available for officers specialising in ophthalmology, gynaecology, radiology, and anaesthetics to obtain higher qualifications. Officers who qualified were appointed specialists and were entitled to specialist pay. It is of interest to note that in 1923 there was a total of eight medical specialists of whom seven were members of the Royal College of Physicians. Ten years later there were 115 specialist appointments in a total establishment of 682 medical officers.

While the training of specialist officers continually improved, the training of officers in their duties in the field, and especially collective training in field medical units, was practically non-existent. Regular field medical units did not exist, although some experience was to be had from time to time with skeleton medical units on the North-West Frontier of India. Although many efforts were made, it was not until 1938 that a training field ambulance was formed in Aldershot, and to which officers and men from all Home Commands went for three weeks' training. The reason for this unsatisfactory state of affairs was two-fold: shortage of personnel to meet the normal commitments of a peacetime military medical service, and shortage of money.

It is now necessary to consider the Warren Fisher Committees. The background to them was rising discontent with conditions of service among doctors in the Armed Forces. The situation was particularly acute in the Army, and the problem has continued right down to the present day. In the immediate post-war years the British Medical Association took an ever-increasing part in negotiations with the War Office on conditions of service and pay of medical officers. At the end of 1924, after more than three years of negotiations, no solution had been reached. In June 1925 the Director-General stated that the deficiency of medical officers would soon reach a total of 90 and that the state of the Corps would be incompatible with military efficiency. At about the same time the British Medical Association informed the War Office that it could no longer encourage medical men to join the Corps nor agree to publish the terms and conditions of service in the "British Medical Journal" until matters had been satisfactorily settled.

In August 1925 the Government decided to set up an inter-departmental committee, under the Chairmanship of Sir Warren Fisher, to examine and report on the situation. This, first, Warren Fisher Committee reported in April 1926, but the minor concessions recommended did nothing to improve the situation. By 1931 the deficiency of Army doctors to establishment was more than 100, and in May of that year a second Warren Fisher Committee was appointed, but its report was not made until July 1933.

This Committee considered the problems of discontent under three headings:

- (1) Lack of professional opportunity.
- (2) Lack of economic attraction.
- (3) Inadequate status.

So far as the Army was concerned, the inadequate status referred to the Director-General not having a seat on the Army Council, a point strongly pressed by the British Medical Association. The Committee, however, considered this outside its terms of reference, but it did make positive recommendations under the other two headings:

1. Professional Improvements:

- (a) The proportion of officers given the chance of specialisation could be increased and the period of the career during which specialist work was available to them could be lengthened.
- (b) The opportunity of continuing in professional, as distinct from administrative, work as an officer rose to the higher ranks could be improved.
- (c) Posts providing insufficient professional opportunity could be eliminated from the establishment with the result that the average proportion of the average officer's total service spent in professionally interesting posts, particularly hospital posts, could be increased. The Committee went on to recommend a post-graduate study course after an officer had 5 to 7 years' general experience.

2. Economic Improvements:

The Committee did not recommend an alteration in the scale of emoluments, considering this was only one aspect in determining the financial value of a career. It did, however, take account of the length of the career, of the ages of promotion, and of the proportion of officers that could be promoted from rank to rank. In these aspects it did not consider that the Medical Services were compatible with a satisfactory career.

The Committee enunciated the following principle: "We regard it as a necessary principle in the administration of a medical service that, when the number of posts of higher responsibility has been fixed, the entry into the service, so far as that entry is given the expectation of a life career, should be limited to such a number as will allow of entrants suitable for higher responsibility reaching the posts which impose that responsibility at an age when they are best suitable to undertake it. The results of failure to apply this principle are that men entirely suitable for higher responsibility serve their whole career, and are retired without being given the opportunity to exercise it; or that they reach the highest posts at ages at which they are already too old to adapt themselves to the responsibilities."

It therefore proposed that the entry of officers into the Medical Services who are given the expectation of a life career must be regulated in relation to the number of posts of higher responsibility available to them. They further considered that the large majority of officers should be enabled to serve to the age of 57 and a minority to age 60. It recommended the upgrading of the ranks of certain appointments and proposed financial improvements in a career, particularly between the ages of 35 and 50: "during those years that an officer that marries relatively young feels the heaviest burden". Promotion to Captain was to be after 1 year's service, instead of the previous 3½ years, to Major after 10 years' service, to Lieutenant-Colonel after 17 years' service, and to Colonel after 25 years' service. About 75 per cent of officers joining would reach the rank of Colonel.

It further advocated a system which obtained in the Royal Air Force, and to a lesser extent in the Royal Navy, of employing non-permanent officers in order to provide adequate career prospects for permanent officers. This led to the introduction of the 5-year Short Service commission, on which all officers had to serve in the first instance. At the end of it, officers not selected for, or not desirous of a permanent commission, could return to civilian life with a tax-free gratuity of £1,000 and with a Reserve liability of 12 years. In the days of private practice this sum was of considerable help to a doctor wishing to purchase a suitable practice.

The Committee also recommended a reduction in the overall numbers of Army doctors by eliminating posts not requiring qualified men to fill them and substituting non-medical officers. Finally, it recommended that the number of specialist posts be increased to 155 against a proposed total establishment of 750 medical officers.

The proposals were accepted and came into being on 1 May 1934, and in 1935 the British Medical Association withdrew its refusal to co-operate in the recruitment of medical officers for the Armed Forces.

The Period after the Second World War

With the outbreak of war in 1939 appointments to Short Service commissions ceased and were not again made until 1944. Although some officers who were appointed to Emergency commissions during the period were subsequently granted Short Service or permanent Regular commissions, their number was not as great as might have been expected, and they covered a wide age group. The total number of permanent Regular officers remained small but, as conscription was continued, the flow of National Service medical officers into the Army tended to obscure increasing deficiencies in the Regular cadre.

During the war a small number of permanent Regular officers had attended shortened courses at the Staff College. In the immediate post-war period four medical officers were sent to each 1-year course there, but this was soon reduced to one officer a year. Two officers were also sent each year, although this had to be discontinued for a time, owing to shortage of officers, to the 6-month course at the Joint Services Staff College. The impetus of war had also emphasised the need for continued field training, and the Field Training Centre was formed for this purpose. It, however, was to disappear in 1964 when it amalgamated with the Depot and Training Establishment R.A.M.C. on the move of that unit from Crookham to Keogh Barracks, alongside the Army School of Health. One major difference between this post-war period and that after the 1914-18 War was that field medical units existed as part of the peacetime establishment. Many of these were only in cadre form, but a fully established one took part in the war in Korea in 1950 and others saw active service in internal security operations in Palestine, Malaya, East Africa, Egypt, Cyprus, Borneo, and Aden. In 1963 the Knott Committee was formed to make recommendations for the organisation of field force medical units of the future.

What was to have a most important effect on recruitment to permanent Regular commissions was the creation of the National Health Service. Not only did this offer a doctor security of career up to the age of 65, but it also gave him a retirement pension and various ancillary benefits such as incapacity and widow's pensions. As the National Health Service Act of 1946 prohibited the sale of practices it greatly reduced the chances of getting a practice for a Service medical officer retiring at age 57.

Although the last National Service medical officer did not leave the Army until 1963 it was apparent long before this that the number of permanent Regular officers was inadequate, and in 1952 a Committee, under Sir John Maude, was appointed to enquire into the shortage of medical officers in the Forces. This Committee recorded the number of medical officers in the Army as follows: permanent Regular 409, Short Service 158, and National Service 907. These figures represented a deficiency of 14.89 per cent in the total numbers required. There was, as yet, no post-war establishment for permanent Regular officers and there was a retirement ban on such officers until 1953. The Committee noted: "The present-day medical students, 60 per cent of whom are maintained wholly or partly by public funds, differ markedly from the general run of their predecessors. They are predominantly interested in the science and art of medicine and pay correspondingly less attention to the social and sporting activities traditionally associated with life in the Services."

In giving evidence before the Committee the British Medical Association was "forced to the conclusion that the question of remuneration is the important factor to be taken into account". It considered that the pay of Service medical officers should be related to that of the general practitioner in the National Health Service plus an inducement factor of 20 per cent. The Committee did not agree with this view, since Service pay already included an element to compensate for the disadvantages of moves and so on.

The Committee drew attention to a deficiency of both senior and junior specialists of 35.5 per cent and 28.8 per cent, respectively. It also considered the possibility of a medical cadetship scheme but did not recommend it. Its main conclusions were:

1. Permanent Regular commissions should be granted from the outset of an officer's career and not only after completion of a 5-year Short Service commission.
2. Ante-dates of up to 7 years should be given for civilian experience.
3. A 3-year Short Service commission should be introduced.
4. There should be better publicity.
5. An inducement grant should be payable to entrants to a permanent commission.

The Committee did not agree that there should be a general increase in pay or in specialist pay, nor that there should be inducement grants at 10- and 20-year service points.

In September 1953 the Ministry of Defence announced that a new Committee, under the Chairmanship of Lord Waverley, was to be set up: "To review the arrangements for providing medical and dental services for the Armed Forces at home and abroad in peace and war: and to make recommendations." As this review would undoubtedly take time, the recommendations of the Maude Committee were to be put into effect and, in addition, improved rates of pay were to be given to officers between the ranks of Major and Brigadier and to all specialists, and posts would be created for retired officers.

The Waverley Report was not published until 1956. It immediately noted: "The position in the Army is particularly disturbing. No less than 55 per cent of the medical officers hold National Service commissions. About 90 per cent of all general duty medical officers employed in units in the Army are of this category." It went on to state: "More important, the number of Regular officers, even though supplemented by Short Service officers, is inadequate to provide the necessary specialist services."

The investigations of the Committee covered a wide field. It looked at the possibility of amalgamating the three medical branches of the Armed Forces and, like the Mond-Weir Committee of 1923, opposed this. It equally opposed integration with the National Health Service. It did, however, confirm the importance of the Medical Services Co-ordinating Committee, formed in 1948, and recommended that its work could be extended. It also considered that there was no valid argument for the Director-General to have a seat on the Army Council. It thought there were "great objections" to a medical cadetship scheme being introduced but recommended that women doctors should be eligible for permanent Regular commissions. The first commission of this kind was granted in December 1961, with the exception of course of the celebrated Dr. James Barry in 1813.

On professional training the Committee recommended the secondment to teaching hospitals of officers training to be specialists, and that specialist gradings should only be conferred on the recommendation of a Board composed of two Service specialists and one leading civilian consultant. Furthermore, each Service should make more use of civilian consultants for advice and assistance. Regular medical officers, other than clinical specialists, should be encouraged to obtain the Diploma in Public Health.

It then reviewed Service conditions and recommended adequate warning of posting, appointments to have a 3-year tenure, revision of the rules for the allocation of married quarters in order to place medical officers on an equal footing with combatant officers, educational grants for children at boarding schools, and the co-operation of local education authorities in the provision of school places for the children of Service parents.

Considerable changes also resulted in respect of pay and prospects. Increases in pay were proposed for all ranks from Major to Brigadier. Diploma pay should be allowable for officers below the rank of Colonel. Specialists should be eligible for promotion to Colonel, subject to competence and irrespective of establishment, and specialist colonels should receive specialist pay. Priorities in the allocation of married quarters were also recommended for certain categories of medical officers. Specialist Advisers at the War Office should hold the rank of Colonel and specialist officers of the rank of Brigadier and Major-General should be given specialist pay whilst holding such appointments. The overseas Command Consultant appointments should be upgraded to Brigadier, and three of the clinical Directors at the War Office should be Major-Generals. In order to achieve this upgrading the number of administrative Major-Generals should be reduced. It was also recommended that Army Health posts up to and including Deputy Assistant Directors of Army Health at district headquarters should be filled by general duty officers with the Diploma in Public Health. All these recommendations, with the exception of the employment of general duty officers in Army Health posts were met in the course of time.

Reference has already been made to the importance of the advent of the National Health Service on the recruitment of medical officers to the Armed Forces. In 1962 a "Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration" was appointed under the Chairmanship of Lord Kindersley. In the same year the Government decided that the pay of medical officers in the Armed Forces should be related to the average earnings of general practitioners in the National Health Service and should carry an added inducement payment of some 15 per cent. This was one of the improvements in what was called the "New Deal", the others being quicker promotion, the introduction of the classification of consultant, comparable in every way to the corresponding grading in the National Health Service, and the creation of a medical cadetship scheme. In future, qualified and registered doctors would be commissioned in the rank of Captain and be promoted Major after 5 years, to Lieutenant-Colonel after 13 years, and to Colonel after 23 years' service, subject to recommendation. In the case of general duty officers only three out of four could be promoted Colonel in any one year. The medical cadetship scheme enabled medical students to be commissioned after they had passed the Second M.B., or equivalent examination, and had started their clinical studies. These officers were to continue their studies at Universities and Medical Schools in the British Isles and were obliged to serve a 5-year Short Service commission on full registration. They were given the rank of 2nd-Lieutenant while students and the rank of Lieutenant during their pre-registration year. Commissions could also be granted during the pre-registration year and carried the rank of Lieutenant. Such officers were obliged to serve a 3-year Short Service commission on registration.

The "New Deal" had an immediate effect and more than a hundred medical students were commissioned in the first year after its inception. Direct entries to permanent Regular and Short Service commissions also greatly improved. However, by 1964, recruitment of both medical students and direct entry officers had started to decline. By 1967, although the specialist cadre was up to establishment, there was a greater shortage of general duty medical officers than at any time in the history of the Corps. The British Medical Association again blamed inadequate remuneration for the situation. In 1966 the Seventh Report by the Kindersley Committee had recommended a new and improved pay structure for general practitioners in the National Health Service and, as the pay of Service medical officers was related to the pay of general practitioners, it was expected that the new system would result in considerable improvements in the pay of the former and that this would have a deciding effect in overcoming the shortage of general duty medical officers. The Government, however, did not accept the analogue and made an arbitrary award. To make matters worse, the rest of the Army proper was given a pay rise amounting to almost double what was proposed for medical officers and the latter were subject to a "pay freeze" for 6 months. When they ultimately received the rise it was 15 months after the rest of the Army, albeit back-dated for 9 months. The British Medical Association, after prolonged negotiations with the Government, decided in March 1967 to decline advertisements for the medical services of the Armed Forces in the "British Medical Journal" and to inform Deans of Medical Schools in the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland that it could not recommend a career as a medical officer in the Armed Forces.

Such is the situation as this book goes to Press. Recent history is too close at hand for any dispassionate comment to be made but it is clear that there has always been a shortage of R.A.M.C. officers in peacetime. Perhaps the historian of the future will incline to the view that the requirements of a peacetime and a wartime military medical service do not coincide and that any manpower deficiency in a peacetime establishment can only be at the expense of readiness for war. Each and every committee enquiring into deficiencies omitted to consider the role of the R.A.M.C. in war and, instead, concentrated upon comparison with the civilian profession. That the latter comparison was absolutely necessary there can be no doubt, but in terms of a military medical service it is, to say the least, paradoxical.

NOTES

1. The information contained in the record of military service of each officer was obtained from various sources but primarily from the Corps Records maintained by the Regimental Headquarters, Royal Army Medical Corps, from individual officers' Records of Service and from details provided by those officers still serving on the Active List in the latter part of 1966. This information was supplemented by reference to contemporary records such as Army Lists and Army Gradation Lists. Up to generally about 1920 there were very few Army Records of Service available and details for these officers were obtained almost exclusively from the Corps Records.
2. The entry for each officer is not intended to be comprehensive but only to give an outline of military service and generally the more senior appointments held, although where available certain other information such as regimental medical and specialist appointments have been included.
3. Where two dates, with the second in brackets, appear against an officer's rank, the second is the seniority date or antedate for seniority purposes.
4. Campaign medals and stars. Only those actually recorded in military or corps records are shown. No effort has been made to assume an entitlement even where the award of a campaign medal, star or clasp would appear to have been obvious.
5. The use of the term "BEF France" or "France" is used considerably throughout this work although the theatre of war also covered Belgium. The records do not in all cases show the actual countries in which an officer served in this theatre and it can therefore be assumed that, although only one country may be named, the officer may have served in either France or Belgium or both.
6. Every effort has been made to ensure accuracy in each entry by so far as possible checking important information with other available records. However, it would be appreciated if any important errors or omissions are notified to the Regimental Headquarters, Royal Army Medical Corps, Royal Army Medical College, Millbank, London, S.W.1, for future reference purposes.
